Mickey Mass : How Not to Backpack on a Budget before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised How Not to Backpack on a Budget:

In 2004, Peahead and his brother, Piss, decided to spend a year backpacking in Australia and New Zealand. They applied for working holiday visas for both countries, bought plane tickets to Perth and booked their first two nights accommodation. That was the sum total of their preparation, which, for a couple of guys who had never travelled before, might seem rather insufficient. Still, they say you learn from experience and mistakes. Well, most people do anyway. Before they departed, Peaheads friend, Vee, bought him a diary and suggested that he keep a record of their adventures. This is that diary. What follows is an entirely true account of the brothers journey. It involves tales of heavy drinking, bad language, terribly inefficient use of money, childish behaviour and judging people completely unfairly on first impressions. If you dont like fun, then this diary isnt for you.
