

NPR Road Trips: Fairs and Festivals: Stories That Take You Away

• • •

NPR

audiobook / *ebooks / Download PDF / ePub / DOC

 Download

 Read Online

#3302231 in Books 2012-06-05 Formats: Audiobook, CD, Unabridged Original language: English PDF # 1
5.30 x 7.87 x 6.40l, .10 Running time: 3600 seconds Binding: Audio CD 60 pages | File size: 19.Mb

NPR : NPR Road Trips: Fairs and Festivals: Stories That Take You Away . . . before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised NPR Road Trips: Fairs and Festivals: Stories That Take You Away . . . :

0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Awful By John C. Awald I can't give less than one star or I would. Not sure who might find this funny but it isn't the Prairie Home Companion humor we were looking for. Took it out of the cd player and resold it the same week. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. I love the different stories that are shared By Deena J. Hahn I love the different stories that are shared. Some of the pieces are about festivals that I found quite novel - haha. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Lots of Fun By DWD's Reviews Published by HighBridge in 2012. Multicast Duration: about 1 hour. My family and I are avid fans of fairs and festivals. We like to wander around and experience the hullabaloo of all of the people, the noises of the midway, the incessant sales pitches of the guys trying to sell replacement windows or guttering and, of course, the animals. We just attended the Indiana State fair last weekend and spent an astounding 13 hours wandering around the giant circle of the fair (it is built around a one mile dirt track) seeing everything from Star Wars Stormtroopers to a petting zoo filled with week-old calves to a giant carving made of cheese (still being carved as we watched!). I learned about $261,000 John Deere Tractors, heard an acoustic blues band, bought a wallet and saw a clown marching band performance - all before we hit the midway! So, when I found this little audiobook of stories collected from NPR over the years about fairs and festivals I knew this was right up my alley. There are 18 little stories here that originally broadcast on the air from 1999 to 2011. Most are two to five minutes long, the longest being a little over ten minutes. Fairs and festivals in Texas, Minnesota, Ohio, Iowa, Tennessee, New York, Alaska, West Virginia and more are discussed. Garrison Keillor leads off with a philosophic look at fairs and why we love them and why we are in such a hurry to get out of there when you have seen enough for one day. And, of course, he discusses the phenomenon of "food on a stick." Other topics include the sounds of the fair, displays of various and odd collections, a "husband-calling" contest, a cornbread festival, a music festival, a butter carver and a wood chopping festival. There are stories about the other side of the fair as well. We learn about the freak show, how to make the perfect carnival pitch, how to get racing pigs to race and the story behind some of the folks that make the glorious fair food. As with all compilations, some entries are better than others, but even the weaker ones were strong in this collection.

Step right up as the gates swing open at fairgrounds across the USA. This delightful collection explores the unique joys of the public gatherings that take place in cities and small towns, when people of all stripes and sizes meet to gawk at cows, ponder seed art, get hypnotized, compete in husband-calling contests, and eat virtually anything on a stick. Farming, food, politics, parades, shilling, glad-handing, people-watching, and silliness are celebrated here. If you've been to a fair or festival, you'll love this collection. If you haven't, here's what you've been missing.

This collection of NPR features starts off with Garrison Keillor's comments about the crowds people have to brave if they actually go to a fair. Listeners don't have to, though. They can sit back and hear the sounds. AudioFile