The author once again pulls at your heartstrings and tugs at your inner soul for a new personal adventure. This time he shows the strength,love,guidence and support of his true love and wife who's story he captures incredibly of how raising a family while traveling can be such be an inspiration to us all!! This is a family full of love and a book that is a MUST READ for everyone! It opens your mind and heart to anyone who thinks travel with family would be impossible. They make you feel and prove that even on a low budget anything is attainable. You just need love and positive beliefs. BRAVO once again to the author! 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Road to Sedona - fantastic read! By Windinghill Yet another fantastic read!! Louis is back and he and Dee continue their adventures - this time with the whole family in tow! The heroes are not bystanders in this thing we call life, rather they actively take control (to the extent one can) and make life happen for them. A fantastic GRAND surprise at the end! Well done! Can't wait for the next one!!! 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. A FIND WORTH LOOKING FOR! By gayle pace MY THOUGHTS Can you even imagine that in two years crossing North America six times, over twenty thousand miles and finally setting roots. This story is about two young children and their parents were left with very little money and not much hope for a job. This was after 9/11. They go on the search for a new home and a new life. They travel North America six times from one corner to the other corner of the map. Most of us don't like change. It makes us unsure, afraid even when we know it's for the best. Sometimes change isn't our choice but life's choice. We go along because we have no choice. The reader makes you take note that home isn't where you live or where you're going to live, but home is having the ones you love with you. That's what makes a home. This couple and their children made plans and the plans fell apart. There wasn't ever enough money and times were hard at best. But they traveled on, searching for what was best for them and their family. It was a journey but it wasn't about the journey but where they would end up. Often times we think we need the big expensive house and all the trimmings to make us happy. We don't stop to think, what if that was all taken away in a heartbeat. What would you do, no house, no job, nowhere to go? You'd strike out searching for that place that would truly be home, no matter where, no matter what kind of living quarters it was, so long as you were together. The book contains some great pictures such as Erawan Falls in Thailand, On the Annapurna Circuit in Nepal, Healy, Alaska, The Chase House in Alaska, The DeMayo family in 2003, and more. The author takes you, the reader along as a traveler in this quest for a place to settle. You get to see all the different places the family traveled to in the vivid descriptions the author provides. What a ride, what a journey, what a FIND! I received a complimentary copy of this book from the author and voluntarily decided to review it.

We resist change, even when it's exactly what we need. Most of us prefer to wallow in our losses before letting our hearts drift into the future. And even when that change is thrust upon us, we suffer through it, only reluctantly traveling that new road. This is the story of a young family who set out to discover a new home in America. Jobless in the wake of 9/11, they cross North America six times in their quest, peripatetically wandering the country from Maine to Alaska to Baja and the southwest. Along the way they discover that home is something you take with you, and even if your adventure turns into a complete coddiwomple--money running out and plans crumbling before your eyes--it really is about the journey, not the destination.

About the Author Robert Louis DeMayo took up writing at the age of twenty when he left his job as a biomedical engineer to explore the world. Over the coming years he traveled to every corner of the globe, experiencing approximately one hundred countries. He is a member of The Explorers Club and The Archaeological Institute of America. During his travels he worked extensively for the travel section of The Telegraph, out of Hudson, NH. For three years he worked as marketing director for Eos, a company that served as a travel office for six non-profit organizations and offered dives to the Titanic and the Bismarck, Antarctic voyages, African safaris and archaeological tours throughout the world. Following this, Robert worked for three years as a tour guide in Alaska during the summers and as a jeep guide in Sedona, Arizona, during the winter. He was general manager at A Day in the West, a Jeep tour company in Sedona before he decided to write full time. He is the author of The Making of Theodore Roosevelt, a fictionalized account of Roosevelt's acquaintance with wilderness living, The Light Behind Blue Circles, a mystery thriller set in Africa, The Cave Where the Water Always Drips, an adventure tale set in modern and colonial times of the Southwest, and Random Thoughts from the Road, a collection of poetry and prose. His most recent novel, The Wayward Traveler, won a Pinnacle Book Achievement Award. This memoir-based story follows, Louis, a young adventurer, who runs out of money while abroad and creates a list of Rules for Survival to get by. Currently he resides in Hollis, N.H. and Sedona, AZ, with his wife Diana and three daughters: Tavish Lee, Saydrin Scout, and Martika Louise.
