It is a quick and simple read which would appeal to children and younger teens I suspect as well as adults. It is full of adventure and action, sometimes funny and sometimes sad. Although it ends with a tragedy it is also positive in its philosophy. I liked that. My personal favourite story was the episode with Moon and Boo-Bee-Dah. It reminded me of a self-confessed warlock I once met at a friend's house. He professed his love for all living things and then a tiny wolf spider came out from under his chair. You wouldn't believe the screams! Well, by the time my partner had put it outside with his bare hands my friend had peeled him off the ceiling... It makes us smile to this day, as did your book. Thank you for the opportunity to read this via Goodreads Giveaway. I wish you look with your stories and many productive train journeys to come. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Fantastically entertaining read!!! By Customer The moment I started reading the first page I truly had a hard time stopping. This book is a very easy read, not to detract from its greatness, and seems to me suitable for all ages. I found this very entertaining. I myself travel a lot and could really relate with the main character in a lot of situations! Definitely passing this book around to all my friends and family! Thanks Sam!

Stanley Other leaves his comfortable office job to go out in search of life, and spend some time in the wilderness. But he doesn't find quite what he's looking for, and the events that happen to him bring up questions about the very essence of life itself. The Woods, The Jungle, The Sea is a character based novel about one man's love affair with nature. It is part comedy, part philosophy, and part thriller, and will make you look differently at your relationship with the environment that you live in. This ground breaking debut novella has been acclaimed by critics such as Samuel Bigglesworth's mother, his friend Steve and his neighbour's dog, and is bound to become one of this year's must reads.
